

Vidyo and 2+2+2 Programs

What are Your Needs?

- Do your advanced students want to begin working towards a four-year degree while enrolled in community college?
- Would your students benefit from understanding the path towards specific careers?
- Would you like to create a student pipeline with local K-12 districts and community colleges?
- Do you have training programs to help your community meet demand for workers in particular fields (i.e. nursing)?

Obtaining a higher education degree can be a long and expensive process. Students who have chosen a course of study before senior high school often want to start working towards their chosen degree program as soon as possible. Offering students accelerated programs can help them reach their goals sooner while reducing overall educational expense for the students and their families.

The Vidyo Solution

The need to bring together administrators from multiple institutions to work out articulation agreements

Before a 2+2+2 program can be implemented, participating institutions must have an articulation agreement in place. Vidyo can make this process easier by connecting all parties conveniently from their home campus locations, eliminating the logistics, delays and expense of travel and helping administrators to accelerate the decision-making process.

The need to connect high school students with dual-credit courses

High school students often take higher-level courses offered by community college or university professors. They can access these courses from their schools by participating over Vidyo.

The need to connect community college students with instructors/researchers at four-year institutions

Community college students can start advanced coursework early by connecting to four-year institutions and researchers. Studies show that by engaging early, students enjoy a smoother transition to their final two years of study.

The need to connect students with working professionals for mentoring and support

When a student needs encouragement and support to complete a degree program, having a mentor who is working in his chosen field may help ensure that he remains focused and motivated with a clear set of goals. Using Vidyo students and mentors can meet regularly at convenient hours. Having the ability to meet face-to-face helps personalize and strengthen the mentoring relationship.
